Empathy - Students will be able to deliberate about societal issues and how the roles in society have evolved over time with a focus on females. They will then debate whether society has reached a platform where females have the same opportunity as their male counterpart.

Self-regulation: Students learn to become both curious and reflective about their own learning through feedback cycle of green sheets.

This half-term, students will develop their knowledge and understanding of how physical activity and sport have developed through time and the factors that shape contemporary sport. For the 'Emergence and evolution of modern sport' topic area, it will be beneficial to include the use of case studies in particular sports (for example football, tennis, athletics or cricket) which can be charted through the different time periods covered.
